Patronizing Small Stores.

ticularly in the crowded times, I find th smaller shops very satisfying. The greatrading places hold such through that it is not easy often to get near enough to counter to examine an intended purchase I saw a woman swept by a counter one day wildly gestivulating in the surgina erowd, 'Pil take the pink one.' I don't be lieve she ever got it. It was a vase she wanted. In a store a few doors away, de voted solely to the sale of porcelain ware o all grades, she could find plenty of vases the corner shops near my residence. It such shops are conducted by persons of taste and activity, as they often are, the so-sortment, though small, will be choice. A to the avenue I have often picked up the daintiest pieces of bric-a-brac. A single piece of Drussien, perhaps, or a bit of old sale assortment. And the price has always been satisfactory too. I think a work should be spoken for the small shops, it only on the principle of Tiving and les live."-Her Point of View in New York

Among the strange fatalities of the year there are none more noteworthy than those surrounding the colonelcy of the Twenty-first infantry. In less than a year the regiment has suffered the loss good for the complexion, and many American ladies are testing the claim. The value Conrad. SOCIALISTIC THEATRICAL COMPANY.

It Is an Offshoot of the Footlight Club a Queer New York Organization. The theatrical business is a queer one New and strange things are constantly turning up in it. The other day, while searching for information as to how young people may get on the stage, the writer found one of the strangest—the Footlight club, of New York. On the cards of this organization appears the inscription, "The Footlight club, a stepping stone to the pro-fessional and not to the amateur stage." But the scope of the club does not end there; it is practically a co-operative the atrical company, and in this instance the principles of socialism seem to have been Successfully applied.

Clifford Collier, a young ex-actor, who traveled for a time in the companies of John McCullough and other stars, but who gave up the stage as a vocation personal reasons, was the organizer of the club and is its president.

Its membership is made up of professionals and amateurs in about equal proportion. There are always scores of good ctors and actresses in New York who for the time are without engagements, and a few of these have made up their minds that it is better to belong to the Footlight -where is given an opportunity playing many parts and thus gaining valua-ble experience, even if there is little or no money in it-than it is to lie idle. The benefit to the amateurs is apparent. They are taught how to act in perhaps a better way than they could be in any dramatic

The rooms of the Footlight club are in a theatrical exchange building, the top floor of which is given up to a little theater. The owner of the theater rents it to the club for a merely nominal price, because he recognizes the good that comes of the organization. On this little stage the club studies once a week by rehearsing some comedy. At longer intervals regular performances are given. Theatrical managers have learned about the club, and generally at least one or two are present at each re hearsal. By watching the work of the Footlight players, managers who are looking for actors and actresses to take places in their companies are often able just the person needed. The club has therefore become a sort of actor's market -a place where unengaged thespians may exhibit their ability before possible em plovers. The cost of membership in the club is very small for the men, the entrance fee ng only a dollar or so, while the ladies have nothing whatever to pay. Running expenses-rent, gas bills, etc.-are shared equally by the men. Mr. Collier gives his

More than this, the club makes money or at least it hopes to this year. Four of five comedies will be carefully rehearsed until something as near perfection as pos-sible is attained. Then the members of the club will share equally the expense of producing them in small towns near New York at standard prices of admission, and if there be any profits they will be equally divided among the actors. It would be hard to find a more earnest, women. They are all ambitious to secure success on the stage, and if hard work will bring it they stand a very good chance of realizing their desires. Pitcher Frank B. Killen. One of the most promising pitchers in the country is Frank B Killen who has affixed his signature to a Milwaukee contract for next season. Killen, who is a left handed twirler, is a great general while officiating in the box, and his deceptive curves have time and again proved very puzzling to the acknowledged leading bat men of the country. Left handed pitchers are generally considered very erratic, but Killen can safely be put down as a bright exception. He was with the Minneapolis club of the Western association in 1890, but owing to his youth and lack of confidence did not show to great advantage in the

He did excellent work with the stick, however, his averages being as follows: Number of games played 25, times at bet 76, runs scored 13, and first base hits 34, with a percentage of .316. He was again with the "Millers" last season till they disbanded, when he was at once secured by the Milwankees of the American association, for whom he pitched winning ball till the close of the senson, and his stick work and general all round fielding showed a marked improvement over that of 1890.

Even greater things are expected from him during the senson of 1822.

Actors Who Are Athletes.

Bob Hilliard is a very athletic looking

Bob Hilliard is a very athletic looking man of something less than forty years old. He is sometimes spoken of as "Fighting Bob," but there are people who quietly smile when tales are told of Hilliard's F prowess. Maurice Barrymore, on the contrary, is not a particularly powerful look-ing man, but when it becomes necessary be can use his fists very neatly. He was once the holder of an English amateur chamself getting so much as a black eye.

An orange fad is among the possibilities. can ladies are testing the claim. The varies of the orange in other wars has long been recognized. It is reported that at some in obvious asylums oranges have proved an efficient substitute for alcohol, patients sucking the juice of them abundantly are time the thirst for Equor comes upon them. This fact is so well recognized that often at temperature coffice stands poles of luscious oranges are also kept.
